

LIFE AND TRAINING IN AMERICAN CAMPS

On November 24, 1917, was organized what proved to be the most successful baseball team in the American army. This team of the 321st Infantry, with its 1,000 per cent. record and several "no error" games to its credit, challenges any team in the American army to produce a finer record. The team made equally as fine a showing overseas as in American camps. Its last game was a "no error" game against the A. P. O. 762 team at Le Mans, a few days before the regiment returned to the States.

The Secretary of War, Newton D. Baker, visited Camp Jackson, December 21, 1917, and reviewed the 81st Division. The splendid showing the division made on this occasion, and the commendations received from the Secretary of War, made the men feel a little proud of themselves and their division. They were beginning to see some reason for the hard and intensive training they were being put through.

The dance given on December 5, 1917, by the officers of the regiment in honor of Colonel and Mrs. Shuttleworth will be remembered as one of the big social events of the 321st. But the officers of the regiment will remember with even more pleasure the New Year's reception given them and their lady friends by Colonel and Mrs. Shuttleworth, January 1, 1918.

Enthusiasm and interest ran high during the regiment's first Field Day, December 21, 1917. The splendid records made showed that the regi-
